

Indian Vengeance (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Indian Vengeance Gissaosh has brought us great shame, said Konawok, the chief of the runaway wives tribe, as he addressed his people, and we must make his people pay heavily for it. Five days from this enough of us must proceed to Wrangell and force our claim. We must have enough strong men of our tribe to fill three large canoes, and when five suns have come and gone we will go and bring back Kosteen, the wild wife, and the pay for our disgrace. My sons, make ready, and arm yourselves well, for Wrangell blood may have to flow before we get what we shall demand. The speaker was a tall, swarthy Indian with determination depicted upon his countenance. The people whom he addressed were members of his own tribe, and they listened to their chiefs remarks with a gravity becoming the occasion.
