

Gospel: A Tale of Human Mortality and a Girl

GRIM REAPER GETS OUT OF DODGE
So say worldwide headlines about reports that no deaths have occurred in a small Oklahoma town over an extended period. But what's the story behind the miracle? The town's Mayor claims an earthquake caused by oil company fracking released a life-altering substance into the town's water supply. A preacher of oldtime religion proclaims that biblically foretold End Times are at hand. Also in play are strong psychic currents of mind-over-mortality positive thinking. * A yoga studio recently introduced OM to the community as a means to transcend the limitations of ordinary life and create a pervasive state of nirvana. * Shortly before disappearance of death in town, a newly opened boot camp for washed out business executives started promoting a gung-ho spirit of survivalism. * The local newspapers freshly adopted practice of reporting only good news and publishing lots of good advice may have produced a self-fulfilling gospel. Or it could be, according to one of multiple suggested conspiracy theories, that half-dead town residents are walking around above ground as only half-alive zombies. A young local reporter ---- Henryetta rides again! ---- tries to make sense of all this strangeness depicted by noted author, Simon Plaster, and maybe win for herself one of those Pulitzer Prizes.
