Like many of our friends in the seventies, we decided to become independent , to birth our own children without intervention of drugs or surgery, with good protecting medical coverage just in case, we decided to chose wood for heating , grow gardens and raise chickens and goats for food. It was a good life free from the daily jerking and pulling of extraneous news and the involvement of political power struggles. We voted , we worked hard, we loved knowledgably and deeply. We thought we were all learning and doing things that would last, were better for our families and ourselves and therefore would be passed on to all of you. It was a good life. We were right . We were wrong. It wasnt naturally passed on. We were wrong about that. We werent perfect . We didnt even try to be . We just wanted something that caused less harm, was healthier, and was closer to the nature of who we were meant to be. Just young people trying to do it right for our children. I suppose that is all every generations tries to do. Who would have thought there would be power working against that? As I said , we raised chickens and goats. I chose goats instead of dairy cows due to my husbands one condition of my farming our land, Dont get anything bigger than you. implying he would chop the wood and help care for the children and house but the farm was my idea. In choosing the goats one had to study. The Rodale Press was an encyclopedia of doing it naturally . So like the books for birthing naturally, breast feeding and child development, I studied farming. We had friends with lop eared little Nubian goats, large stately Alpine, American bred, Alpaca coated and American. I chose the American Alpine hybrid goats for their good milk supply and cream. And because they were available in the Catskills. We lived at the Northern edge at that time. Driving to worka nd home was breathtakingly beautiful combining not only what God had given all of us with what the hard and good travail of women and men contributed to it. We were teachers and councilors, tamers of people. The farmers were tamers of the earth. The soldiers were tamers of the cruel. The peacekeepers were tamers of excess. It was all there in the sunrise and sunset of the drive from an to home. Before I picked up our goats, I had to clear the field of vegetation that would prove toxic for the goats, Choke Cherry was a particularly poisonous plant. I became a tamer of the fields. So all of the choke cherry bushes were removed allowing the goats to free roam. Well roam they did.

Many people who don't farm think that goats and sheep are in the same class. Well they are not. Sheep are grazers, largely feeding as cows do by grazing the grasses and clovers of the field. Goats are not grazers. Goats are browsers. They are closer akin to deer than to sheep. They have a delicate and balanced digestive system and half of farming them is managing their browsing so that they do not eat themselves literally to death nor browse the farm barren of fruit trees, berries, flowers, and occasional laundry. It is hard to tame a goat. They have a penchant for curiosity that could not only kill the cat but themselves. It is a very big job keeping a browser in place, guiding their eating habits, and keeping them alive.

We had to learn that, we the children of the 60s and 70s. Those were hard and costly lessons. This is the story of how we learned what to browse and what to leave alone. Those of us who lived through it owe it to you to pass on the lessons learned.
