

Mamies Watchword: Thou God Seest Me

Mamies Watchword - Thou God Seest Me by Joanna H. Mathews MAMMA! can I have it? Can I, mamma? Buy it for me, buy it; will you, mamma? May be so, dear. I will see about it. No, not may be; not see about it, mamma! I must have it, and I know you can afford it! The speakers were Mrs. Stone and her little daughter Mamie; the scene, Miss Ashtons broad, shady piazza, where, at this time, a little fair was taking place. And what was the object on which Mamies heart was so set; for which she was begging so persistently, you will ask. Why, just this. A beautiful doll; a famous, much-talked-of doll, dressed as an infant by Miss Annie Stanton, for the fair; a doll eagerly desired by all the children present, as any little girl will readily believe when she hears that seldom has a doll had such an outfit. Mamies eyes were fixed eagerly upon her as she pleaded and entreated with her mother, holding fast to her hand, and almost dancing in her extreme anxiety to secure the much-coveted prize. Perhaps I can, dear, said Mrs. Stones rather languid voice, as she looked smilingly down at her little daughter; perhaps I can afford it; but you know, Mamie, that the doll is to be sold to whoever shall offer the highest price for her. Well, you offer the highest price for her, mamma; do, oh, do! Offer a great deal more than any one else, so I shall be sure to have her. I want her so! But it is not to be known what each one offers till the fair is over, Mamie, said her mother; then, whoever has said they will give the most, is to take the doll. Ask Miss Stanton to tell you, pleaded Mamie. Mrs. Stone shook her head. That would not be fair, Mamie; and Miss Stanton would refuse to tell if I asked her. I will make an offer for the doll, but you will have to take your chance with the rest, my darling. Mamie was so little used to any opposition or contradiction from her over-indulgent mother that she did not know how to meet it; and, though it was made thus plain to her that it might not be within her mothers power to give her the doll, she felt as though the possibility of disappointment were more than she could bear, and as if it would be altogether mammas fault if the longed-for toy did not fall to her share.
