

City Women

The literary anthology City Women is itself a kind of city, and to enter pages, a masala of energies, signs, and yearnings, is to travel through the heart of a cumulative, stirring bazaar. Here are cities of liberation, memory, and renewal; wounded cities; cities of decay, predation, and suffering; lyrical cities, and cries of love; cities of subversion, exhilaration, and vision; cities (forms) attempting to be born.

Liz Heron is a superb guide to these territories. With affection and insight, she presents the urban world as a place, an organism, like nature itself, of change and mystery. Keep City of Women next to Italo Calvino's Invisible Cities as testimony to the emergent musics, patterns, and shifts of form that coalesce as ways of habitation.

By gathering and commenting on cities experienced and hope for by women, Heron reveals the possibilities for dwelling that grow in the female imagination.
